The parents of 10 children who all started college before the age of 13 insist their precocious sons and daughters are 'not geniuses' - instead crediting their 'efficient' homeschooling regimen for their family's academic success.

Monalisa Harding, 53, and her husband Kip, 53, who are high school sweethearts from San Jose, California, homeschooled all their children from the same syllabus instead of sending the kids to traditional schools.

They knew they were on the right track after getting each of their first three children through high school by the time they all turned 11, a success that was repeated by their next seven kids.

Their oldest child, Hannah, went on to earn a bachelors degree in mathematics at the age of 17 from Auburn University, Montgomery in 2004 - making her the first child prodigy.

Last year, their youngest child Thunder, 11, passed his entrance exams to college, joining Lorennah, 13, who is already in her second year.

Those of the Harding siblings who have already graduated from college have gone on to become doctors, architects, spacecraft designers and lawyers.

The sixth Harding child - Seth (pictured with sister with Serennah) became Alabama's youngest lawyer at 19, after passing his degree and professional exams during the pandemic

Monalisa says her children 'aren't geniuses'. She says that the efficient nature of homeschooling (and her children's hard work) guaranteed their academic success

Eight of the brothers and sisters have already graduated by either 15 or 16 - and all went to university before they were 13.

The most recent family graduate Mariannah, 16, is now applying to do her masters in horticulture in January.

Seth Harding, 20, child six of 10, became Alabama's youngest lawyer at the age of 19 after getting his law degree and passing his professional exams during the pandemic.

But humble Monalisa insists her kids 'aren't geniuses' - and said their success is down to homeschooling which is more 'efficient' than going to school.

Lorennah is the ninth of the Harding family's 10 children - all of whom started university by the age of 13

Monalisa, said: 'The nature of homeschooling is so efficient - anyone can do it.

'It's just about parents dedicating the time to get it done and prioritising their children's education above all else.

'We're not a wealthy family. We had to make sacrifices so that I had the time to teach each of them individually.

'When you raise kids in an environment where homeschooling and hard work is the norm, then, as they grow, they'll naturally adapt to it and take it in their stride.

Mother Monalisa with her lawyer son Seth. She described homeschooling her children as 'a hell of a journey', but said they 'wouldn't change it for the world'

They've spoken at conferences across the U.S., and have even travelled to Japan to share their experiences.

'We've had the best time travelling around and helping other families who want to homeschool their kids,' Monalisa added.

'It's really fulfilling because we put our hearts and souls into our children, and knowing people admire that and want to do the same is a really great feeling.

'It's important to find that balance between not putting too much pressure on your kids and making sure they're reaching their full potential.

'We just have Thunder and Lorennah to get through college now, and then we can finally think about making some time for ourselves.

'It's been a hell of a journey but we wouldn't change it for the world!'
